

NOISE INDUCED TRANSITIONS IN A CARBON CYCLE MODEL

CHRIS KRT JONES

Climate applications require a level of noise that is larger than normally considered in large deviation theory. In the example of Rothman's carbon cycle model, we show how the most probable path behaves as noise increases and will discuss an obstacle, based on the Maslov Index, to its configuration for intermediate noise levels.